

GIN

Gin derives most of its flavour from the Juniper berry, and through the combination of infusing, and maceration of different fruits, herbs, spices and even combining other spirits.

BOURBON

Bourbon is an American Whiskey that is produced in Bourbon County in the United States. To be labelled a Bourbon, the whiskey has to be produced in Bourbon County, Kentucky, be made from at least 51% corn, and barrel aged in charred oak casks for at least 2 years. This ageing gives it smoothness as well as the beautiful brown colour. It can then be played with to bring about unique varieties which sometimes are not bourbon at all but a close relative, such as Rye which has only one requirement being that it is made with 51% Rye. Bourbon/Tennessee/Rye whiskey all have their own unique characteristics so feel free to quiz our bartenders to find something interesting and approachable!

SCOTCH

Scotch is Whisky that is produced in Scotland under certain strict guidelines, including being made from water and malted barley, which has been turned into a mash and fermented, and aged in oak casks for at least 3 years. There are many types of Scotch such as single malts, single grains, blended malts, and blended grain. Within these categories the locations of the distilleries are important, with the ingredients, distillation/ageing methods, and equipment including the casks and stills, all being different. All these elements mean that every Scotch is unique and has an individual flavour profile, so come and peruse the shelf for something that perhaps is new to you.

BLENDING WHISKEY

FROM AROUND THE WORLD

Whiskey is a spirit that is growing every year and becoming more and more interesting as different cultures and people start producing it. As the only requirement to be labelled a Whiskey is that it has to be distilled from a fermented grain mash, means that the variety is as immense as Gin. So ask the Bartenders for a whiskey from a perhaps surprising place.

RUM

Rum is a spirit commonly derived from the fermentation and combination of molasses and/or sugarcane juice. Rum is famously associated with being from South America and the Caribbean but is also produced around the world with different countries and distilleries adding their own spin to the famous spirit. These are commonly derived from adding different fruit/herbs/spices to the actual spirit or through barrel aging. So please ask us about our range and try something new!
